Introduction

My greatest concern is when a nation's potential is not attained. If our potential is not attained, then whatever is driving us cannot be love.

Love. It is love which this nation currently lacks. Don't be fooled, a lack of love is the root cause of every problem described hereafter. This love is only attained by knowing Christ's love, receiving that love, then loving others as Christ first loved you. The love I speak of is not a sick, perverted, sexually immoral love that many imagine as true love in our "modern" age (in fact, such a twisted ideology is simply a return to barbarism that existed in the pagan world for many years before Christ's people founded modern civilization). Many would already see the problems written in the following pages if they loved others as they did their own person. Few do. It's been a lengthy study to realize that the problems which exist rear their head in every age if it is allowed by Christians. Ours is no different.

Love comes from God (as in the Father, the Son (Jesus Christ), and The Holy Spirit; I make a point of describing the Holy Trinity because many use the name of God in vain and do not mean God at all). A lack of love means worldly selfish fear will win. Such fear will paralyze a person from helping another when they ought to act. Fear will stop a leader from placing his life in danger on behalf of the people he serves (please note the generic use of "he" includes both man and woman, whereas the generic use of "her" excludes men). Love is the great counterweight which will cause one to act when weighed upon the scales of contemplation. It doesn't take a genius to know that if you truly fight on behalf of another against a formidable adversary there will be a struggle which can be costly; hence, the only reason one will risk their own life or limb on behalf of another is if that person actually loves the other person more than his own being. Love is more essential than anything else in living the life which God intended. Love is the Grand Unifying Theory of physics in my opinion, because sacrifice is the key to understanding all things either physical or spiritual, from the Cross to Creation or beyond.

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

Love from God created Christian Europe from a land of Picts, Gauls, and barbarians. Christian Europe, through the practice of Christian tenants and only for that sole reason, created the modern age (I emphasize this to say it had absolutely nothing to do with their skin color, their location on this Earth, or any other factor whatsoever). The belief that Christ’s blessing and their adherence by His Body (the Church) to His Word formed the modern world is entirely contrary to what a “secular” textbook will inform you. The great stability which exists from practicing Christian tenants are what permit modern society to exist, for instance, consider for a moment the single Christian tenant of forgiveness toward all and it’s micro and macro effects upon a person, a family, a town, a pair of towns, a city, etc., then imagine this cascading effect of grace through the generations. While a secular nation may manipulate technology for its own use for a season, without Christ it will turn into a violent nightmare. Those who seek to emulate the blessings we’ve enjoyed in the historical West will execute the tenants of Christianity rather than the bondage of sin if any person or nation seeks to enjoy such salvation.

However, a lack of love (and discernment) has allowed a dangerous cult to slip in among this Christian nation and establish itself over us these many years. It has, generally speaking, spent its days stealing our life, liberty, and property.

I am, of course, referring to the Secular Satanic Freemason state. Moreover, make a point to understand when anyone talks about “secular” government (or any use of the word secular at all), it is merely code for “satanic”; meaning, “apart from Christ” government. This is similar to when someone uses the word Republic, it is simply a thinly disguised Democracy to which is truly being referenced whether understood or not by the speaker. Democracy is, of course, the dangerous two wolves and lamb voting on lunch (did not Christ warn us we would be sent out like sheep among wolves and to be as wise as a serpent but as gentle as a dove?) which feasts on the innocent as we’ve witnessed with particularity these past couple years.

Those “inalienable God given rights” which a citizen allegedly possesses have been totally rolled back (or at some point, partly “returned”) at the convenience of the Secular Satanic Freemason state. The Freemasons have two prominent parties among our nation which pretend to be polar opposites known as the “republican” or “democrat” party, however, both (at their core, similar to Freemasonry at its core is satanic though many of their members know it not) are of the same mind, purpose, and organization; don’t be fooled. The Freemasons (or satanists) have been in control of the federal government for many years (and have taken over the state and local governments almost totally); whilst acting as a great parasite that constantly steals life, liberty, and property from this Christian body. Mind that you understand, we don’t wrestle against flesh and blood, but against powers and principalities. But in the future, I would greatly caution the people of this nation against entering into agreements apart from God’s leading with those they do not truly know (were not the Gibeonites able to deceive Joshua when they didn’t ask God first?).

The most complete reading on Freemasonry is found on the official Vatican website (as of the day of this writing). The “HUMANUM GENUS, ENCYCLICAL OF POPE LEO XIII” ON FREEMASONRY was written on April 20, 1884. It is compelling. It takes less than an hour to read and is a more accurate account of all the crimes Freemasonry had committed, intended to commit, and would eventually commit than any writing I’ve ever read on the subject. The nature of Freemasons and their typical tactics were clearly outlined, and warnings were issued to clergy and layperson alike to be aware of their nefarious existence. Nevertheless, as with many great warnings, they are typically totally unappreciated at the time.

It is my opinion that the Secular Satanic Freemason State will not last much longer. I believe their fall will probably be very similar to King Saul’s fall in the The Holy Bible (and likely will occur in the latter part of A.D. 2030, if their rule lasts into A.D. 2032 I’ll be sincerely surprised). They will probably be led into a desperate military confrontation in which they will be dramatically destroyed at the hands of foreign enemies. In fact, I should think they will likely even commit suicide by “falling upon their own sword” rather than allowing themselves to be captured just as did King Saul from The Holy Bible. This is all assuming there isn’t a miraculous repentance before such an end.

I would like to make a point of saying that as David was loathe to destroy Saul, so the Church should not lift its hand to destroy the heathen who are currently in power as I believe God will be the one to do it (this means the Secular Satanic Freemason state should not fall by civil war, and no Christian will have any part if such an engagement does arise, as it was God who destroyed King Saul by the hand of a foreign army so it shall be God who destroys these same satanists). Moreover, God can change his mind when anyone repents and humbles their heart according to His Word, who can say what will happen tomorrow apart from God? If those within the occult sincerely repent, who knows what may happen?

Biblically speaking, it is clear the only legitimate head of a government is the Church. The literal interpretation of the word Church in the Bible is “government” (see “Ekklesia”, it is used as the word for government and Church). It has been the endless effort of the satanic Freemasons to delude and, at any cost, discourage us from recognizing Church-government legitimacy even though it is a plain and historically referenced fact; and further, Freemasons attempt to paint Christian Government as a "dark age" of terror and oppression (whereby "science" rescued the world after the "abominable rule" of Christians in Europe)! Such pure and utter nonsense! Kingdoms based on Christian doctrine with true legitimacy lasted over a thousand years! The earliest one founded still exists (meaning Armenia, and this is despite paganism in the region trying to genocide and destroy it for its full length of years). Most people point to three things as "proof" that Christian government should not exist.

First, the Inquisition. What practically no one knows is that only about 3000 people were executed by the Inquisition over the course of (get ready!) 400 years! That's about 7 or 8 people per year. Compare that with the Reign of Terror brought on by the Freemasons in France that created quite nearly what could be regarded as the true first "world war." A massive number of dead, starved, and frozen to death individuals attest to this heathen triumph in the late 19th century. And that is only a single example; there are thousands. I would probably need a new keyboard if I wrote all their disastrous murderous campaigns down in detail, never mind those to which I have no way of knowing.

Second, folks point to The Crusades. The Crusades were mostly a response to the dangerous rise of islam (a militant "religion"), whereby millions of individuals were enslaved, raped, murdered, and genocided throughout the Middle East and into Europe by Muslim invaders. Islam, generally speaking, still breathes out the same extreme hatred toward Christians (see thereligionofpeace.com for the latest figures) and the entire Earth, despite the "secular" narrative to the contrary. This isn't to say there are not some very nice muslims in the world, there are! I've met some myself. However, the general thrust of that religion is not peaceful whatsoever, and only a fool would believe otherwise.

And finally, the Salem Witch trials. Somewhere in the neighborhood of 10 to 12 people were executed for witchcraft (they could have simply been exiled as the first person who rebelled against the authorities at Plymouth was banished, later, it was revealed she was a witch after her awful self-destruction). Compare those 10 or 12 people with the witchhunt of Donald Trump, the persecution of tens of thousands of January 6ers (whose actions surely were wrong, btw, however the extreme response was simply without precedent), and the persecution of many who stood against the 2020 steal.

There is simply and absolutely no comparing the extremely destructive nature of Freemasonry with the "worst" one might allege about Christians. It is the largest and most criminal enterprise currently in existence or to have ever been known to exist. It has been a dark age since their rise, upon the whole Earth.

"Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?"

Will having the Church at the head of the government mean perfection? That's laughable to even suggest. Will this mean no problems will arise? Of course not. But this action is largely about humbling ourselves before the Lord God Almighty and plainly stating, "We need you to lead us, Lord; without you, we are lost." And that is, of course, totally accurate and true and backed up many times in The Holy Bible. The reasons we have survived so long and so well is entirely because of Christ's blessing through his Christian body dwelling within this land.

To reiterate, a cult has slipped in and taken over a Christian nation. These Freemasons are presently unrepentant and on a trajectory for failure. The Church should not prepare for civil war, ever (in fact, praying for those in charge and even doing whatever you can to help them as long as it doesn't violate the laws of God is totally right. Moreover, even forgiving them for the present sins they are committing is totally required so we don't become worse than they were, as those who don't forgive will typically injure others in the same manner; moreover, unforgiving people cannot be forgiven by God for their own sin). The Christians of this nation should also dedicate their full wealth to taking the Gospel into the entire Earth, I feel if we refuse to do so God will destroy our wealth. Evangelism was always the central point of Christians establishing new nations and this should be the focal purpose of our wealth.

While this pamphlet cannot address all the ways in which evil is being practiced in our land, it attempts to address some of the worst things happening and how to fix those issues.

The only way to enter into this leadership calling is strictly by faith. To force yourself into power flies in the face of all Christ taught, especially through naked violence. It will take patience, prayer, understanding, and above all, love, for this nation to become a Christian nation. I don't know that it ever has truly acted as one ought, but it will have the chance soon.

One quick word on Freemasons as individuals. Freemasonry, the organization, I believe is wholly evil at its core. However, some who enter Freemasonry may not be aware of all it is involved in and are not at all "in-line" with the true doctrine of that to which they belong. I had two very good friends in my past who were Freemasons, and they truly were both really nice people. However, they didn't understand what they were a part of, or refused to come to terms with the nature of what they had joined. As such, it's not good to be mean, ugly, nasty, or otherwise obtuse toward any individual because they are a member of Freemasonry. Love is Christ's prescription when dealing with individuals.

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

However, the ugly truth of the organizational core of Freemasonry must not be ignored, instead, it should be totally exposed such that we are free of all lies.

Ultimately, we should all remember that we are just beggars at his Doors of Mercy, asking to be shown the right way from day to day; and know that we are clothed according to His good purpose for whatever task is at hand, be it with plenty, with nothing at all, in sickness or health, with many or none, hated by the world, misunderstood by many as we Follow Him to whatever End He has Ordained.

How to Fix Matters Concerning Life:

On Abortion

Abortion is wholesale genocidal murder and it should outlawed unless the life of the mother is threatened by the birth of the child (such findings should be verified by two doctors and only permitted thereafter at the request of the mother; all such findings should be reviewed by a panel before any such procedure is carried out unless a life threatening emergency compels the doctor to act immediately).

Unless the former noted exception exists, any who participate in the murder of an unborn child (this includes doctors, nurses, owners or investors who have controlling power of any such institution which engages in such actions, the mother, etc.) should be charged with 1st degree murder and sentenced to the strongest possible legal remedy available.

Also, those who purchase body parts of a murdered unborn child should also be charged in a similar manner (or any who have owned or profited monetarily off such a sick “business”, including those who make vaccines using human babies). Leaders who have permitted such laws to exist should be retroactively charged by future prosecutors unless they fully, clearly, and absolutely repent publicly of their sin. Those mothers who allowed this to happen will automatically bear the penalty in the form of the guilt and suffering they have (and will) endure. Sin is serious business, David was forgiven the moment he repented, but he suffered the rest of his life for what he did. Christ have mercy.

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

Eugenics has been and always will be a war crime. It is genocidal murder to allow abortion and it should never be permitted in a Christian nation or anywhere at all on God’s Earth.

The Justice System – Breaking Out of the Prison Cycle

The entire form of corrections, specifically in the system we call “prisons”, is as cataclysmic a man-made disaster as one could ever conjure in terms of being woefully inhumane, inefficient, and absolutely counter to any cause which is healthy to the execution of justice.

Prisons are vicious places which bring out the worst in prisoner and guard alike. It has an extreme failure rate according to a wide-ranging Department of Justice study which surveyed over 30 states and found that 83% of prisoners were re-arrested within 9 years of release. At one point, nearly 1 in 100 Americans were incarcerated or somehow connected to the corrections system (such as by parole). Currently (as of October, 2019) 1 in 7 adults in New Orleans have warrants for their arrest! When will this absurdity stop? Why not just arrest the whole city and nation for crying out loud!

To sum it up: People go to jail, they come out worse (generally speaking, exceptional persons do exist).

It hurts everyone involved; the prisoner, the guards, the government, and the citizens who live with the consequences because of a higher crime rate and a waste of their tax money for an ultimately critically broken component within the justice system. The prisoner which may be incarcerated for a nonviolent drug offense, a failure to pay child support, or for a driver who had a suspended license may very well be brutally raped, viciously assaulted, and irreparably maimed by even a short stay in prison. A longer term stay in prison almost guarantees the individual will be heavily anti-social, wounded mentally, likely wounded physically, suffer from paranoia and a slew of major life-altering obstacles. Even guards within the system become more animalistic to merely survive regardless of their moral character because of one simple fact; prisons are radioactive. They are toxic, evil, inhumane, and worthless at correctly bad behavior. And “bail reform” is about as worthless as not taking a placebo pill.

This system of punishment does not work! It is tremendously expensive, unbalanced, and unsustainable.

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

So, how do we fix the prisons within the Justice System? I call it the CESR plan (and it gets rid of prisons).

The acronym CESR stands for Capital punishment, Exile, Switching, and Restitution.

In my model, all crime is divided into two categories; violent and non-violent. All violent crime falls under the Capital punishment and Exile prongs of the CESR acronym. All other crimes fall under the Switching and Restitution prongs of CESR.

I define violent crime as “an act which killed or seriously maimed another human being without cause.” This would include murder, attempted murder, rape, kidnapping, arson, attacking someone with a deadly weapon, etc. Standard fistfights, general assaults, or some similar action would not fall within this definition of violent crime. If someone commits a violent crime within the definition listed above, the only two punishments would be using Capital punishment or Exile.

Capital punishment (CESR)

Capital punishment should be reserved for only the most serious of crimes and criminals who, by their extreme influence, cannot be adequately quarantined on a prison island (as described in the ensuing prong). Truly, exiling an individual to an island where similarly minded violent people exist is actually the nearest Biblical punishment when considering the story of Cain and Abel. Cain was forced to wander away from all he loved and knew, this was a more powerful death penalty in many ways and granted him the chance to reconcile his sin with God.

Exile (CESR)

Exile stands for the concept of taking someone who does not deserve the death penalty but has committed a severely violent crime (bear in mind "violent" as applied here does not mean a bar fight or some generic form of confrontation, but rather someone who “killed or seriously maimed another human being without cause”), such that they cannot be trusted among law abiding citizens any longer.

For instance, if a person has taken a baseball bat to someone's head and beat them within an inch of their lives, how can a judge at the time of sentencing predict when that individual can be trusted with a defenseless totally innocent person in the future which the judge loves? Would you be willing to risk your own son, daughter, husband, wife, etc. with such a person in the future? If you say “yes”, you are either lacking a serious nature or beyond vain. Often one displaying such vanity thinks it a “great virtue” when, in fact, it only reveals great ignorance. This isn’t to say a person can only commit 1 violent crime in their life and never repeat such an event, it is simply a fact that 1 violent crime is enough to garner separation from lawful society because no one knows if 1 violent crime is all that person will actually commit.

You cannot trust someone who intentionally runs over another human being with their car in an attempt to kill them. You can’t trust someone who took a weapon and shot someone in a senseless act of violence. You cannot trust someone who stabs someone in the chest over a parking spot.

You can't trust someone who does these things because that person may very well decide to strike again against a defenseless innocent person in the future.

It's not good enough for society to say "Well, if they do it again, we'll lock'em up!" Try explaining that to the family of the guy who has brain damage and will be a vegetable for the rest of his life because a violent criminal decided to strike again ten years down the road...how will you comfort them, exactly? If you know someone is dangerous, you have an obligation to stop them permanently.

People who have committed severely violent crimes have lost the opportunity to live within a law-abiding society. The best and only solution for violent criminals is to permanently Exile them to a prison colony in a remote part of the world (preferably an island, of which there are tens of thousands in the South Pacific). This is best for a variety of reasons:

1. It removes the criminal who can never again be trusted within our nation while severely punishing that individual by separating them from all they love and know forever.

2. It requires the criminal to take responsibility for their lives (which, historically, happens!).

3. It does not impact prison guards and their families negatively, rather an island prison could be blockaded by the Navy permanently, which puts guards at an arm’s-length in terms of distance.

4. It takes away the influence of the violent criminal which would turn others toward a life of crime; I cannot underscore heavily enough the force multiplying beneficial effect of permanently removing a violent criminal that inevitably will persuade others to engage in the same illegal activity if given the chance. The extremely negative influential synergy of a violent criminal will cease to exist through the use of Exile.

5. It is cost effective and sustainable; "modern" prisons are extremely expensive to maintain, and if we keep locking people up at the present rate such growth is malignantly unsustainable.

Exile a one-way-ticket with no parole and no prison terms; it is a life term and that means life! It removes the element of society that treats prison as a “game” (particularly gang members) or as a "rite of passage." If anyone from the prison colony escapes and is found, the criminal should be sentenced to death.

As an interesting side note, many areas eventually became very nice places which started out as prison colonies (for instance, Australia, parts of Georgia and the southeastern US). While the reasoning for sending people to prison colonies in that era greatly differs from this initiative, I think similar results will ensue eventually. I don't doubt that a prison colony in its first years would be very chaotic and violent but after a time I should think it will be far more habitable as the Exiled take proper responsibility for their new lives. An initial issue of farm animals and basic agricultural hand tools would be given to those living in Exile, however, if there is starvation it wouldn’t be wrong to alleviate such conditions as they arise.

All other crime is separated under the Switching and Restitution prongs.

Switching (CESR)

There is no way around it, some people need to be beaten with a stick before they are going to act right.

I wish that weren’t the case. However, there can simply be a stubborn part of man’s fallen nature that won’t respond to anything but actual physical pain. I would like to emphasize, this isn’t done in order to harm someone for amusement or to satisfy some sick sadism of another. It’s actually done to help someone stop breaking the law as they grow older. It corrects their trajectory in life so they don’t end up doing something far worse one day. Switching someone is, essentially, a preventive measure.

Switching is the recommended punishment for crimes which could have resulted (but without direct intention by the criminal) in severe bodily injury or those which caused a lesser injury to another. For instance, a bar-fight, a drunk driver, a simple domestic assault (someone is pushed or slapped), etc.

The most perfect example of someone who needs “switched” is the classic case of a drunk driver. Drunk driving killed over 10,142 people in 2019. This accounted for nearly 1/3 of all automotive fatalities according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. We are losing more lives annually on roads than we do during the length of entire wars on foreign soil. Even a single death due to alcohol is entirely unacceptable. Many people actively choose to drive drunk do so because there is not adequate fear of any consequence for their misconduct.

Drunk drivers generally do not amend their conduct because of a ticket (even disproportionately heavy ones which ruin their employment, family life, and their need to travel on roads in vehicles). We need people to obey the law, not avoid the law by suspending their license. We need people who are able to work and travel rather than a bunch of people asking for rides who can’t work. The state has an obligation to make people do the right thing when it comes to risking another person’s life or limb. Suspending someone’s license for endangering another person’s life is not proportional. It achieves nothing because the state has to force the drunk driver to change their conduct in the future while driving. It isn’t just for other’s safety, it is for the well being and livelihood of the wrongdoer as well.

Beating someone with a stick because they endangered the life of another will probably change their mind. Taking their money probably will not change their mind. I’ve never heard someone stand up and say “I was an alcoholic for 30 years, I drove drunk over and over again and only hit a few things I’m not too sure about, but after I got a ticket I got rid of that lifestyle completely!” Putting that individual in prison will have the opposite effect (because prison generally makes someone more rebellious against the law, more antisocial, more violent, and encourages the destruction of an individual's moral compass; it also will destroy their livelihood most likely and leave the individual even more depressed which can open the door for dependency on various addictive substances). Putting the wrongdoer on parole is silly for a variety of reasons (the entire idea that we need to spend billions of tax-dollars following an adult around like a bunch of adult babysitters is an absurd waste of time and resources).

After a good switching, I’m willing to bet a drunk driver will feel pain in his backside every time he looks at a bottle of beer for the rest of his life. My response to this may be summed up in one word: Good. The pain caused by the death and carnage of a homicidal drunk driver is nothing in comparison with the temporary physical pain caused by a switching. As a matter of mercy, and based on the doctrine that every sin, no matter how private, affects the whole community, up to half of any switching sentence handed down should be remitted if another person(s) volunteers to take the offender's place and partial punishment. I think this will bring a lot of healing, light, and understanding to many eyes.

It will work. And save a lot of lives. Moreover, a lot of people will not spend their life in a wheelchair because we stopped drunk driving (including some people who were actually the former drunk drivers; God may "love fools and drunks," but I've personally hovered over an ejected drunk lying in a ditch and judging by his twisted leg, among other injuries, I don't think he was going to be dancing a jig the next day). For those who still refuse to repent because Switching "isn't enough", Exile can be applied.

Domestic assault is a serious problem in our country. Arresting an abusive spouse has shown to not work time and again. In fact, rather than come up with a viable solution, there are now ideologies studying the problem and exhaustively "explaining" a whole variety of ailments that go along with such abuse (such as battered spouse syndrome, isn't it a shame that this crime is so common that we have whole theories associated with its effects rather than stopping such crime?). How about we fix this once and for all? A restraining order has failed often, sometimes to the death of a spouse. What if the cycle of violence could have been broken before it got to the point of murder? What if the abusive spouse learns that violence has severe consequences the very first time such an offense occurs? What if switching an abuser will not only stop such actions in the future, but actually teaches someone to never lay their hands on another person again? I believe it will have a high success rate.

The greatest and most common hypocritical (and extremely selfish) argument I've found against the Switching prong is when those who support the death penalty argue by saying switching someone is "too harsh." This roughly translates to "I may somehow be the one getting switched one day because I've done some of those other things (or imagine I could do them!), so I don't want to risk that kind of pain or embarrassment...but I'll throw the lever to watch someone fry because I doubt I'll ever do anything to deserve the death penalty!" You rotten human being, whomever you are! The Lord rebuke you. This prong exists so no one ends up having a lever thrown and a lethal dose of electricity (or poison or some other similar method) run through their being. And if you're dull enough to think "Well, I'll just stand against the death penalty then, too" then you're just a coward of an even yellower sort, the fruit of which will be even more lawlessness and chaos which you yourself may one day taste!

"Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?"

Restitution (CESR)

Restitution is a broad term and what I mean is this: for any other type of crime, money or time is taken from the wrongdoer. Those who have committed a crime but without any violence or threat of harm whatsoever fall under this prong. The state makes zero money from any fines levied against wrongdoers nor does it have anyone directly working for it except as a state contractor. I'd like to say emphatically, this prong is not for those who have not paid back loans (see the Lending section for more on that).

Basically, a fine is levied against the criminal if something is stolen and paid back to the victim. Time is taken if the wrongdoer cannot repay the victim for his crime. If the wrongdoer is employed full time then a portion of his salary is garnished for payment to the victim. If he is unemployed, then the wrongdoer will work for a state contractor and his wage will be garnished and given to the victim in the same exact manner. If the wrongdoer refuses to work and pay back what was stolen, the Exile prong is applied.

Another example for applying the Restitution prong would be when someone trespasses (suppose he rides an ATV on someone's property intentionally over and over again). No money was stolen and the property wasn't damaged, so their time is forfeited. Here, the wrongdoer could have the punishment of roaming up and down the street handing out leaflets telling people to not trespass. People are afraid of public humiliation. This would make that person look ridiculous and waste their time which would be fitting for a minor legal infraction.

Conclusion:

Modern prisons are a modern disaster. And it's been a brutal waste of life, money, and time. It is an unsustainable situation that must be changed for the better. The CESR model makes an attempt at getting rid of one of the worst entities currently in existence. I believe it will work. There are many questions and specifics that would have to be worked through, however, this is at least a general outline to start working in a much better direction.

A final note. The war on drugs is ridiculous. Those with addictions should be sent to rehab with mandatory counseling required. This will detox them for about a month. Then they should be returned to rehab as much as it takes until they no longer feel the need to abuse a substance. Those who medicate with powerful drugs are hurting, usually emotionally but possibly physically.

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.

Human Trafficking and Pedophilia

The death penalty should be applied for those who have enslaved any person for labor, sex, or organ theft. This would include those who traffic women (or any person) and act as their boss (commonly called a “pimp”). The execution should be carried out within seven days of conviction.

If you remove human traffickers, human trafficking will cease to exist. Our nation should never tolerate slavery in any form. Those who push for the legalization of pedophilia in any form should be promptly Exiled (this should be the only “non-violent” offense where Exile should be applied, it is unacceptable that any person would push for such vile criminal action to become legal).

People who engage in the merciless exploitation of others should be immediately stopped forever. If we do the aforementioned, criminal activity will be stopped and a lot of decent people will get to live a normal life as God intended.

Marriage and Divorce

Biblical marriage is between one man and one woman. Anything else is utterly outside the Word of God and should not be permitted. A man cannot marry another man, nor a woman another woman.

The predictable common counter argument to the previous statement is “you hate gay people!” Firstly, they aren’t gay, they are miserable. Sin is misery, loneliness, separation from God, and hell. Secondly, I don’t hate anyone, but I do hate sinful conduct. I love everyone, enough to say, “don’t sin (by living a homosexual life) and get thrown into hell for an eternity. Repent, get healing, live the life God intended.” Those who won’t give such a warning, I would counter, actually hate homosexuals because they refuse to warn them of the eternal consequences of their actions.

The current state of marriage in our nation is a travesty. A staggering number of marriages end for a variety of reasons. The laws often encourage divorce in a variety of ways. By ensuring child support, alimony, and a variety of benefits might exist if someone decides to end their marriage, the state has encouraged countless families to break apart (never-mind how often such fines won’t be paid). Divorce is an extremely grievous sin that will send many to burn in the hot fires of hell for an eternity.

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

The greatest way to help the families of our nation is to forbid civil divorce except in the instance of adultery (which should be severely punished) or violent abuse. If someone is severely violent towards their spouse, it would be immediate grounds for permanent exile under the CESR model just like any other common severely violent criminal. If a spouse slaps a spouse or commits some lesser assault, that is why the “Switching” prong within CESR exists. I’m betting this will end domestic assaults quickly. For those who commit adultery, the adulterer should leave the marriage with absolutely nothing (in terms of legal right to any children, physical property, etc.). Someone who commits adultery is, in effect, dead to that family. From acts of adultery spring the most awful jealousies, hatreds, division, death, trouble, and persistent hell one can fathom (2 Samuel 12:10).

Does this seem harsh to you? It would be if you haven’t fully considered what adultery actually does to a person. A marriage that lasts will have an impact for hundreds of years thereafter, similarly, a marriage which fails will have the same impact in a negative manner. It is absolutely critical that married couples stay together for their entire li ves. Marriage (or a divorce) creates a massive cascading effect on this Earth, moreover, there are even greater eternal consequences of someone who lives a deviant lifestyle.

How to Fix Matters Concerning Liberty:

Bearing Arms

The citizens in our nation should be allowed to bear weapons of war. This right exists to protect the people against despotism (which is a form of self-defense on a national scale). It also serves as a deterrent to foreign enemies engaging our mainland. And it is useful as a secondary purpose for private self-defense (concealed carry permits should not be legally required, either, as such action is obviously needed to exercise proper self defense). Also, hunting is a valuable skill and means of recreation.

Currently, the law heavily restricts purchase of certain weapons if you do not possess a valid FFL (Federal Firearms License). I'm of the opinion that if my justice model (CESR) were adopted, we'd get rid of practically all the people we truly cannot trust with powerful weaponry (meaning violent criminals who don’t want to adhere to the lawful bounds of our society). The only weapons which should not be permitted for private purchase are Nuclear, Biological, and Chemical weapons (for obvious reasons).

It is clear to me that drone warfare will soon totally eclipse the traditional roles played by human beings in wars. Unfortunately, many people have never even flown a drone (that will basically be the same if someone has never even fired a gun and ends up in a war-zone in the future). Believe it or not, a high powered military grade drone will move so quickly that I think a standard infantryman (or militiaman) trying to engage such a target will have similar results of a horse charging a tank. Such drone weaponry needs to be freely available for purchase to the everyday citizen to secure added protection against enemies.

As an added note, firearms should not be registered, require a serial number, or require a background check for purchase, nor should any record of the transaction be recorded by any private or governmental agency (and any organization (private or public) found spying on such transaction should be dealt sever sanctions, up to and including dissolution of any such body and their holdings given to the victims). The production of ammo or weapons should be the only business that requires absolutely no business license to operate. Neither should the sale of arms be taxed so as to encourage innovations in this crucial field.

Nero's Column

Once upon a time, the Emperor Nero of the Roman Empire ordered that laws should be written in small print on the highest columns of the city. He also posted his guards at the base of the columns to keep everyone back from being able to read these newly passed "laws." These laws were considered binding, so violation of said law could result in severe consequences. I suppose it is an eternal temptation of tyrants to not only draft a law but to also cause it to remain unseen by those who live under such law, whether by physical distance or clever ambiguity. <-dyswidt

Most people are aware the law is written by the legislative body and published online. However, what might surprise many is that case law (judge derived law) is also the law of the land. This case law is typically somewhere online but not in a usable format whatsoever, merely the entirety of a lengthy opinion is posted, the contents of which would take, I should imagine, solid centuries to interpret by any single individual even if that person was actually a licensed attorney (there are international laws, federal laws, state laws, local laws, etc.).

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

I explain case law like this. The legislature of an area passes "what" they would like to see happen, then in real life the typical (yet extraordinary) daily happenings dictate "how" the law is applied in all manner of circumstance. You may know "what" the law says by reading the code, but I doubt you'll currently be able to find "how" it gets applied in various cases and scenarios.

It is wrong that the law should cost even one cent to discover. Many lawyers spend a great deal of money on paid services to discover and understand the law (this is in addition to the free services sometimes made available to lawyers). In the military, I always understood the TMs (Technical Manuals) were written so that a person with an eighth grade reading level would be able to interpret them. This is an excellent benchmark if you want to make a complex topic much easier to understand for a massive group of people (like the population of a nation).

All of this can be easily solved. All laws (the "what") need to have footnotes included so as to connect it to the case law (the "how").

That way, lawyers nor laypersons don't have to spend so much time searching for case law. It will be listed within the codified statute. As cases are decided, the judge will have to submit any case law to be added to the codified law.

For example, suppose the law is thus:

CODE SECTION 18.BUBBLETROUBLE:

"There will be no chewing of bubble gum between the hours of 9 Am to 5 Pm, any violation of this section will result in a 1000 dollar fine and 8 years of hard labor.”

Suppose later a charge is levied against an offender (who's name is Blushes Cheeks), and the offender states they were not chewing bubble gum, but instead just liked to put gum in her cheek in order to pretend she is storing up food for the winter because she imagines herself a deluded chipmunk; how then should the court rule?

Well, of course, the court will need to develop a test describing "how" this will play out. The court decides the test shall be that storing three pieces of bubble gum is reasonable when the average deluded individual declares oneself a chipmunk. The court further finds that since Blushes Cheeks had seven pieces stuffed neatly inside her cheeks at the time of her arrest then she was clearly enjoying the sweet taste of the sugary gum which is the same as chewing it!

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

Incidentally, Blushes Cheeks is sent to the prison gulag (because CESR isn’t passed yet) and makes universal fit concrete shoes for the mob for 8 years.

Well, now that we know how the law plays out in cases, it would be time to insert this into the code:

CODE SECTION 18.BUBBLETROUBLE:

"There will be no chewing of bubble gum{1} between the hours of 9 Am to 5 Pm, any violation of this section will result in a 1000 dollar fine and 8 years of hard labor.

{1} Test for chewing bubble gum will only permit 3 pieces stored in one’s cheek if one is acting like a deluded chipmunk. See Commonwealth v. Blushes Cheeks."

And there you have it, easy does it! This saves time and money and will make the law known to all as it ought to be. Update: Blushes Cheeks was later paroled after bribing the parole board and became a Sicilean bubble gum chewer underboss, showing the counter useful approach to prisons yet again.

Budgetary Transparencies

You don’t know what you don’t know. And you don’t know where your money is being spent.

In our day and age, it is simple when considering type of interface that should exist.

Each budget should start with a pie chart. The breakdown should be the major governmental expenses. If you click on a slice, it should go to another breakdown of the major subsets of that pie chart. If you click again, a more detailed breakdown should occur. This should continue until you find the actual expense described with specificity. Computers are just calculators. We have all the calculation ever needed in a single standard computer to make this occur.

The system should be built from the ground up, meaning as money is spent on an allocated expense it is logged with specificity. At the end of the year, the unspent money is listed as reserved but unspent which would represent it is sitting in a bank account.

For example, let’s say in the initial chart there is a “Government Labor” slice of the pie. You click on that and it has several more headings, one of which is “Government Contracts.” Clicking on that brings you to more tabs, one of which is “IT Contracts.” Clicking on that will bring you to “IT Contractor for City Offices in Seven Cities.” Another click takes you to the actual name of of the contractor filling the services, the time the contract was awarded, the actual bidding process which awarded the contract, the length of the contract, the work being preformed by the contractor (which should be updated at least once per week in a log, which should include the number of employees being used to fill this contract, the physical address or addresses the work is being done, their names, dates of birth, town and city of residence, and their salaries, etc. this protects from “straw man” contracts whereby there are literally no workers and no work being performed and millions are being “kicked back” to the corrupt crony officials setting up such a scheme; government is a public entity and must remain public to be effective and honest), the contact information of the contractor, etc. Now you actually know where your money went.

Any other way of doing this is a failure (pdfs, graphs, etc. all worthless to the everyday citizen who wants to “see the checkbook” and where the money is going in a quick fashion), and it is pure guesswork, theft, and waste when such a system is not in use.

There shouldn’t ever be any question about where a single cent of your tax money goes.

So, when I see big, long, confusing, and daunting looking documents from a government at any level when it comes to finance, I know a couple things instantly. They are intentionally hiding in complexity. Please don’t be fooled and let me relate a lesson from law school. This lesson was taught through observation over the course of those few years and it is this; smart people are smart. I mean as in, really smart. They tend to think in a very similar manner as well because, well, they are smart. Remarkably, this seemingly unremarkable statement is grossly known yet unknown (in terms of its application) among a great many and none too few. Don’t ever think that brilliant people need to collude in order to all stonewall you at once, it’s simply a question of interest. When those in charge only care for their own interests, it’s very obvious.

The only reason a government would hide its budget is because it is doing wrong or simply strongly doubts it is doing what is right. And the wrong action would be the classic theft or misuse of the public treasury. If you don’t organize your government to be accountable, they’ll never stop stealing and the public infrastructure will continue to fail along with the quality of government at every level. Moreover, thieves only grow greedier in time. This will form the rust that will eventually cause the superstructure of a nation to fold.

I have yet to see a government budget website that meets the minimal standard as described above. We need transparency and accountability. Without citizen oversight, all budgets are practically worthless in my opinion because they are totally unproven (not just to me, but actually even the government who won’t know where the money is going; it’s even been shown they constantly “lose” large sum of money from time to time (in the trillions!)).

Citizens should be allowed to show up on a certain day of a week (or ever other week perhaps) and demand (politely, of course) to see inventory, personal performing work, etc. Moreover, every governmental employee should be prepared to explain what work has been accomplished in the prior recent time period to ensure that what they have written online isn’t just nonsense. Why? Because you’re paying for it!

If this exists, good things will happen. If it doesn’t, you’re literally just throwing money away. One other thing, don’t be fooled by the ol’ “we need secrecy, a big secret budget, cause everyone is a high level government secret agent on a matter of national security” or some such blithering nonsense. The entire Roman Empire never had a single intelligence agency. They used common sense and had big families that talked to each other, they did for free what we spend billions upon billions on with very little to show (except bad things, as often as not, and this is despite the borderline attempts at deification of such agencies by their own state run studios in Hollywood, but I digress).

Fair Wage Incentive

Did you know it is illegal to pay someone a fair wage in our nation? I’m not kidding. Except for a handful of jobs (salesmen, waiters, etc.), you literally must pay someone at least a minimum wage. Now you may ask, how on Earth is that unfair? Because if you want an employee to act like an owner, you have to pay him like an owner. And if he’s going to be paid like an owner, the employee has to endure the same risks of an owner as well as enjoy the same rewards. The same stress that “we’ll either feast or go through famine together” has to tug at his elbow just like an owner.

Synergy. Joined Interest. Like Minds. Unified Purpose. Whatever you want to call it, people that are joined together will get more done.

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

The former concepts are impossible under the current system of “scamology” which has been imposed by the Secular Satanic Freemason Pyramid Scheme State (say that three times quickly!). Essentially, you can either pay people hourly or salary. Both are terrible options. Hourly workers make less when they get the job done quicker, and make not a penny more when the business becomes more profitable. Workers, have no real incentive to do a good job (regardless of the worker’s character, in fact, more character might cause an even faster breakdown cause the worker knows, that at least on some level of consciousness, he is getting robbed) and tend to grow more bitter until their attitude is so bad the employee either quits or is fired. And amazingly, if a worker works a longer week (over 40 hours) the business has to pay even more money in “time and a half”; so, a sudden influx of work makes the business owner suffer! But what most don’t realize is this “time and a half pay” isn’t helping workers at all, it’s just making sure they tread water for longer and don’t break out of the debt they are likely living under. Imagine if you worked 70 hours a week (instead of the boss having to hire 1-2 more people to stay under 40 hours a week per worker) nonstop when you were young and saved that money, you might actually be able to retire young, start a business, and live a good life with your family. Salary workers make a fixed amount and are then usually harassed by the boss to work faster and longer hours. If the business grows exponentially, they typically don’t see any profit but rather get to hear more speeches on working faster and longer. Hourly or salary payment methods are both loser scenarios and it makes everyone poor in the end (as I’m writing this our shelves can’t even stay fully stocked with normal goods because the economy has grown so weak and sickly).

Take a company and figure out how much it spends on labor annually. Let’s say it is 30%. The smart way to pay people is the workers then make 30% of whatever is made during their shift. If it’s a fast food business, now instead of feeling exhausted while working hard on a busy night, the worker is happy because he is earning more money just like the business is earning more money. Moreover, if you raise the “minimum wage” to 31%, it is a real raise (unlike promoting inflation by raising the current hourly minimum wage).

Now people are fighting to work on weekends rather than avoiding it. Now the worker wants to see customers return actively, because the customer is bringing that employee money specifically, instead of the employee earning the same amount no matter what he does. Isn’t it common sense why people “hate their jobs”? It’s because they aren’t being paid in the same manner as the business.

There are some jobs where this might be impossible, particularly some governmental jobs. But, with a little work, it can be applied broadly and effectively. Please note, I don’t think this should be imposed on businesses but rather introduced as an option. I believe this system will simply outperform the other two options of hourly or salary.

Workers become more “ownership” minded by actually seeing a greater wage when they work harder and the customer base grows. Workers would need to have authority to determine the number of staff rather than an owner (who would love to hire 1000 people if it’s only costing 30% no matter what! Tax records regarding the number of employees traditionally used in various sectors would help figure out disputes). This system of payment requires that employees would share profit and power but that would be better for everyone in the long run if applied carefully. It would probably take several years of implementing this across different industries and working out the many situations that would arise, but in the end I believe it would be worth it.

The following should be made public for businesses: the average wage of employees, employee turnover, employer highering average as set against number of applications over a period of time. Ever fill out tons of job applications with no reply? That’s because many employers pretend to always have openings, when in actually they just want to look healthy and robust, or have a bloated HR department trying to look busy, or are simply too lazy to remove job postings, or are actually just thinking about hiring and don’t really want to hire anyone (the proverbial tire kicker who likes to waste people’s time). These are actually serious problems that are crushing the job market and wasting a lot of people’s time. It’s remarkable how the privacy of the individual practically doesn’t exist currently while it seems very nearly every privacy protection is afforded a fictional corporation. Honestly, if there were ever a good need for a government website, it would be to do the aforementioned. If an employee is not selected for a position, they would actually be informed (what a novel concept!). I’ve been solicited hundreds of times by scam artists while job hunting, doing the aforementioned would get rid of such nonsense and actually fit real workers with employers whose hiring record is actually known.

And finally, people should be paid at the end of their shift. If delivery service employers can instantly pay you, so can everyone else. Holding someone’s money for a week or two or SIX (like if you’re a substitute teacher employed by the shameful Commonwealth of Virginia) is just dirty and sick. Companies do this solely to keep people poor, plain and simple. There is no excuse for this behavior. It is a classic form of oppression, the Bible expressly orders employers to pay their employees immediately for there work performed. Don’t you dare expect your employees to show up on time if you don’t pay them on time, meaning at the end of their shift, you whitewashed snake pit of pharisees and hypocrites! Christ said it all about you, He was right then, and He is right still!

Many may point to our alleged world’s largest GDP and claim our system is just fine. In WW2, we were engaged in a war by a hostile enemy that was more advanced. We were able to produce the many articles of war required to advance and win, an absolutely enormous undertaking. In 2020, we were attacked by means of nanotechnology in the form of a bioweapon. We couldn’t even make toilet paper.

I call that a bad continuum. And this idea (which is actually an old idea which dates to Plymouth in 1620) should fix the economy largely.

How to Fix Matters Concerning Property:

Lending

Currently, the government basically owns all real estate through Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, FHA, and VA loans (it’s rumored they own only half, to which I say “yeah right”). Essentially, through market manipulation, the Secular Satanic Freemasons have driven up prices throughout the nation (education loans, commercial loans, etc.) and engaged in what is Biblically described in Nehemiah 5. Nehemiah had to carefully consider why the people were becoming poor and destitute (rich thieve don’t usually announce with trumpets their intentions to manipulate the market and enslave others). The situation in our nation is known as classic “predatory lending”. The Biblical remedy for such action is total loan forgiveness.

I didn’t know this at all until I worked in the real estate field for awhile. Many, many, many times I’d open The Holy Bible (and not just one, but several different copies I own!) and it would open to Nehemiah 5. For months this kept happening! It eventually sunk in. Stealing someone’s lifetime earnings makes God absolutely furious. I’ve never had him speak so consistently concerning a particular subject. When you consider a lifetime of labor stolen by predatory lending, and the widow or orphan kicked out in the street, the extreme financial strain causing divorces, and the people yelling “pay your loans, dirt-bag!”, it all makes perfect sense why God would be utterly furious.

"Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?"

It amazes me how many "sincere" Christian foam at the mouth when loan forgiveness is discussed. A couple of possible reasons for this is because they (1) don't know The Holy Bible in terms of applying it to everyday life, and (2) such people may be walking in unforgiveness and want others to suffer as their own person through a heathen system of market manipulation (or maybe both reasons). God help the blind among us, who know neither God's Word or His heart! If one loves mammon so much that it covers your eyes, how can you see God?

The other borderline hysterical outrage comes when people say it will crash the system. How will a bloated federal government crash by forgiving loans? I've forgiven loans, and you know what happened? They didn't have to pay me back. That was it. In fact, if the current federal government reorganized their budget, they could pay down the trillions in debt and get back in the black again if they exercised a little restraint and wisdom. These arguments originate from the same heathens who've created the dishonest system; it has been carefully placed in the mouth of the people by the state run media (commonly called "main stream media") or others in their pay. Don't be fooled.

As a further note, I don't believe any of this will take place under the Freemasons (as they are the architect of this system), but rather, it is something the Church ought to remember and apply at the appropriate time (see the Introduction if you skipped it or the Epilogue).

This is far from the first time that unscrupulous thieves have decided to make a living by loaning money with excessive interest to others. The long term solution is clear, we must outlaw lending that charges interest. Consider the golden ages of Louis IX of France (later known as St. Louis) and Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain, what did both royal monarchs have in common? They outlawed all usury (the classic term for lending money with interest).

If you don't, one thing (and only one thing) will eventually happen and that is what you see playing out before your very eyes in this nation; meaning, people end up owning nothing. When the Baby Boomer generation turned 40 it possessed approximately 21% of all wealth. When "Generation X" (or simply, the younger half of the Baby Boomer generation) turned 40 it possessed 9.1 percent of all wealth. I am 40 as I scribe these words and my generation (The Millennial Generation) possesses a whopping 4.8 percent of all wealth. See what I mean? It's all lenders and their lies, another pyramid scheme meant to enslave all they can perpetually.

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

If you don’t cut off usury, they will own everything and everyone, and right about the time they are putting the gold cap on their little pyramid scheme, watch out! Because here comes the righteous judgment of God to destroy that pyramid utterly, every single time.

Also, the government shouldn’t be lending anyone, anything, ever. It’s a federal government which, in case every human on Earth has forgotten, means its primary task is actually taking care of the needy (meaning orphans, widows, elderly, aliens, etc.), along with managing their two strongest secondary purposes of war and trade. Governments aren’t supposed to be landlords or creditors of their people.

Insurance and Healthcare

Insurance companies should become 501(c)(3) nonprofit entities with capped earnings for all positions with dividends returned to the members biannually once a certain measure of liquidity is obtained by the company. The number of members per company should also be capped. There should be incentive bonuses for employees but those should also be capped. One hundred percent of all financial information should be publicly available (using the described method in “Budgetary Transparency”; incidentally, this should be true of all “nonprofits”).

The way we are doing it now is very backward. Insurance is a black hole which is bleeding our nation dry, filled with price fixing in every sector (insurance cartels make the uninsured pay hundreds and thousands for something worth tens of dollars in the medical field; Big Pharma colludes in this arrangement). Moreover, it is the Church who should receive a percentage of tax revenue and be charged with setting up hospitals and places of charity for the people. The Church was the traditional hospital and place of charity; such an arrangement should exist yet again as they are most fitted for such an undertaking.

There is a way to make insurance cheap and effective. There is also a way to make hospitals and doctors affordable. Between the Church becoming the primary means of care for the sick, poor, and needy as well as 501(c)(3) nonprofit insurance companies being created, I believe we can make a healthier nation in time. Isn’t it common sense that someone who is looking after your health should not profit from you needing more healthcare? It is so easy to lie to someone about their health and convince them of whatever you can imagine, just think if you dropped your car off at a mechanic but you physically couldn’t check a single thing before, during, or after to make sure he did a good, honest job!

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

Ever been invited to return to a doctor over and over again, with little or no results? Or consider someone who has poor insurance coverage, the doctor will simply deny the patient needs proper care because the doctor doesn’t think he’ll get paid. Much of the risk associated with medical malpractice is mitigated because Big Pharma bribes (see Lobbying 101) legislatures to protect them in courts (like by establishing punitive caps to damages). They really are the classic “bold thief”, if nothing else!

But if their isn’t any profit, what will compel a doctor or nurse to want see you feel better? The only thing that will suffice is what was spoken about in the first pages of this pamphlet, love. Love that comes only from Christ and is found only in Christians. A dedicated nun will provide ten times the amount of care than her secular counterpart because those who are called will be anointed for the task. We’ll all be far better off in the Church’s hands with governmental funding than what currently exists. The number of dead (and severely disabled) from the “vaccine” (which isn’t a vaccine but rather dangerous nanotechnology) is staggering and I believe the numbers have been largely hidden. When it becomes known just how many people have been murdered by these vaccines, I think many will see more clearly the sense in doing the two aforementioned things.

As an added note, it is worthwhile to mention the present process of car insurance is woefully dishonest and inefficient. At the moment an accident occurs, an insurance agent should arrive just like a police officer will respond. If it is easily ascertained who is at-fault, the bills should automatically go to the insurance company. Moreover, if applicable, rental cars should automatically be supplied. Pain and suffering is a racket, unless an accident was intentional or through gross negligence, a person assumes the risk when traveling that an accident may occur. While medical bills and money for future medical issues (if such issues are permanent) should be recovered, punitive damages (meaning pain and suffering or fines meant sheerly to punish the wrongdoer) shouldn’t be administered unless there was gross or intentional negligence on behalf of the at-fault party. Every person involved in an accident should be asked to go to the hospital to be checked out. This is self evident. No one knows if they are injured after an accident because that person 1) isn’t an x-ray machine, 2) is not an attending physician.

A date for trial should automatically be set by all parties involved, both insurance companies, all drivers, etc. If a settlement is not reached, meaning all bills and other issues resolved by the date of trial, then the trial will convene and the court will hand out all proper judgments forthwith. No continuances should be granted unless extreme good cause is shown, as the proverbial number games of insurance loves to drag a simple case out for months and years to line their crooked pockets. Moreover, so many obvious functions of handling a car accident should be automated. The need for an attorney can, essentially, be erased with a little bit of modernization. Unfortunately, if there is an archaic field which, above all, has no interest whatsoever in being more user friendly, it is the legal profession (that would be called an “action against interest” which is very rare in the world).

The days of insurance companies not working should be ended, and this is how to end their many abuses. People don’t want cars, they don’t want their health, they don’t want to pay their medical bills; they need these things. Insurance companies, and the corresponding laws, are designed to do nothing at all costs, pay nothing, perform nothing; even though legally every driver must carry insurance. It is typical at this time that many laws for an industry are written by those same corrupt industries because of the overwhelming number of bribes openly being given and accepted by the Elected branch. These abuses should end by implementing the aforementioned.

Transportation Infrastructure

Hyperloops are simple:
“Make a giant hamster tunnel about 4 feet in diameter on existing roadways, suck all the air out of the tunnel to cause very little atmospheric drag, move vehicles by free-floating them within the tunnel on maglev rails while powering the system with solar panels laid on the road(s) next to the tunnel.” This should be our primary means of travel rather than what currently exists.

Moreover, developing a cheap electric car (which is not difficult whatsoever) should be done. In fact, such a vehicle should be able to use the hyperloop and exit onto surface streets as needed. And no, I don’t mean an electric car that can drive itself, make you coffee, and carry your groceries to your fridge (autonomous driving only saves you money when it’s for a commercial endeavor because the commercial driver is paid a hefty fee for moving goods; in all other circumstances (practically) the cargo is the driver, so it saves zero money to outfit such expensive technology to your average vehicle; moreover, all it really accomplishes is the owner loses all privacy rights and control over his private property to whomever decides to access his vehicle remotely). The battery needs to be removable (like tools you see at the hardware store). This is plainly obvious and easy to do for the industry if the price fixing cartels are broken up. It has been reported the sodium battery is now in existence and being patented (which should make batteries cost next to nothing compared to expensive lithium…).

All of this is highly doable.

Please don’t be fooled. Those with money have kept you in the previous century (technologically) in a multitude of ways. I don’t know how you make a cult out of an internal combustion engine (actually, I xdo, you just throw the theological “ball” to one of the lead clowns on the imaginary “left” or “right” (ever see the ol’ “give a credible idea to a discredited public figure” trick?) and then watch them fight to a draw in perpetuity while nothing gets done…), but it is a shocking how many people believe you can’t make a cheap electric car or a good hyperloop that can move someone faster than modern jets for pennies. Has it been done yet? No. Can it be done? Yes.

Young adults can be seen online making remote controlled electric cars go 200 mph. The last time I checked, a technology was shrunk when it was perfected. Hence, just imagine what could of already been done.

“Home” Improvement (Many Key Miscellaneous Things)

There is no reason for homes to decay on the exterior any longer. This is extremely expensive when a home is left for a loss (as you have to rebuild the home one day). The solution is likely hempcrete.

Hempcrete has actually been used for thousands of years. Homes should have a hempcrete exterior, the likes of which do not fall apart like generic siding. Hempcrete is as strong as concrete but far lighter. It is an amazing insulator. By mass producing hempcrete with modern equipment, we should be able to substantially drive the price down quickly.

It should be ascertained if hemp can be used as roofing material as well. At the very least, all roofing material should be made of a high grade aluminum. In the interim, we could simply remove the “3 tabs” from shingles (which are just two long slits that run the near-width of a shingle) which only weaken the entire structure of a generic shingle. This slits are there to make roofing more “attractive,” though I can’t remember anyone saying a roof falling apart bejcause tabs are ripping off after the first good storm looks attractive...

"Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?"

Homes should have large closed system water tanks installed next to them. This is the cheapest way to store energy (no batteries may even be required if it is made of sufficient size). This would require a few items such as a water pump, a couple of water tanks (one in ground, one in the air), a couple solar panels, some piping, a simple inline hydroelectric generator, an inverter, and a hook up to the home. All of this should be standard when building new homes. Hydroelectric dams are enormously powerful; water tanks have the same capacity if we just took the time to use such energy.

As far as solving homelessness, the solution is simple. I've personally built a rudimentary 4' x 8' wooden structure out of 2x4's and such (cut them to about ½ for siding and roofing using a table saw). It is habitable. It cost about 500 dollars or so (without fixtures). If you keep the wood sealed it should outlast the builder. The early monks lived in "cells" of a similar size. Some became early scientists, many of these monks became theologians. Moreover, people spend practically all their time in front of a screen (being entertained, educating, talking, etc.), it is utterly unnecessary to even need a large home (unless you have a family). A couple billion annually would easily eradicate homelessness (literally, if the government bulk purchased materials and the materials cost 100 dollars while using free labor from charities you could build 10 million tiny homes for just 1 billion dollars. And we can use public lands for the location (which sit unused most of the time).

Regarding taxation, the only taxes that should exist in the land is the sales tax at the counter and on imports (its expensive, but worth it, to secure trade routes but we should not be trading with slave labor nations such as China or the Middle East). There should not be an income tax, a personal property tax, real estate tax, or dozens (maybe hundreds?) of other taxes that are placing extreme strain on this nation. Such money is far better left in the hands of the people than entrusting it to the government to "handle properly." One of the primary reasons we enjoyed such success in this land originally is because we decided to quit stealing from the people when we arrived at Plymouth (every person got their own plot of land and whatever was produced was kept by the owner). In the south, slavery took hold and we paid a tremendous price to put an end to it. It is said Abraham Lincoln prayed to God and promised that if General Lee was driven from the North he would end slavery, so consider for a moment that it took that level of intensity for that sin to finally be repented (consider also, that by trading with China you are simply returning to these past sins)...the love of stealing is not something small, is their any part of your heart that is okay taking something that doesn't belong to you? Underpaying someone for a job? Not paying your workers on time? Performing work the wrong way because a boss or customer won't know? Walking out of a store with an item you didn't pay for?

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

Our government didn’t start out stealing as much tax money through hyper taxation (inflation is just a backdoor tax), theft of the public treasury, or general malfeasance of such money as they do now, rather, they grew into it over time. Are you personally in any way similar? I have seen many a Christian with a mammonite idol in their heart, and this simply should not be.

Families should als o stay together. This is the biggest step toward Home Improvement! I cannot stress this enough. A true home is a place of permanence and great stability.

Homes also should be built with the intention of adding on until they can accommodate three generations (meaning grandparent, parents, and grandkids; zoning is currently misused to stop this).

Let me describe the current life cycle which is followed in this nation along with its problems. Man grows up. He gets to a young age (18+) and runs off (or gets thrown out) to wherever he can make the most money. He gets around people with bad habits. He meets the wrong people. He probably gets some bad habits of his own. He’s under inordinate amounts of stress trying to manage a full time job and take care of himself (a physical impossibility to do so properly, by the way). He is still a child and has no idea how to handle practically any of the issues he’s facing (emotional outbursts, angry at God, feeling forsaken, probably always desperate for a miracle). The man knows that if he loses his job (because he’s working for some random stranger or company) at any point then he’ll lose everything. He might get married and have children (or worse, sleep around and have children). The children are under stress because the man is still a child when he has them. The man doesn’t mature any further because when the prodigal steps into the night on his own the time for self-reflection, growth, and maturity practically freezes for decades, maybe permanently. The man’s parents grow old. They grow lonely and are in need of care. They encouraged the man to abandon them and run away (often by throwing him out “for his own good” (often, the same as they were discarded by their very own parents)). The parents are not there for the man or his children (good grandparents can be the most powerful positive influences on a child’s life), or his wife; neither is the man and his children there for his parents. The parents die in misery and loneliness as the man looks on in bitter amusement but is usually too busy to even take a full week off for a funeral, instead he may take only a day or even less time to bury his own father or mother. His parents never passed their knowledge to the next generation. This critical generational learning is lost forever.

And there the barely grieved man sits with the same pent-up feelings of abandonment and confusion while imagining that the hurt, anger, and bitterness sitting inside of him is unseen and unfelt by those closest to him, but often he only deludes himself as he acts much like a two year old with a hammer in each hand, spinning around frantically harming everyone within reach, an emotional toddler in a grown man’s body. And then the children of the man come of age and then the cycle repeats…

It says in the Bible you are worse than a heathen if you don’t take care of your family. And there are many of those in our nation, sadly. People being abandoned to die in nursing homes is unacceptable. This ideology finds itself easily accepted as the doctrine of unforgiveness is practiced over the Christian tenant of forgiveness. Mind two key exception, you are not required to stay anywhere you are being abused. However, annoyed or angry isn’t that which I speak about. Everyone you know to any reasonable degree is going to do things you don’t like (and may even have a habit of doing it). But there is a tenant in The Holy Bible known as “growing in grace” by being around contrary, rude, and ugly relatives which we should learn to endure (that doesn’t mean you accept their ugly nature upon yourself, but rather remain in the grace of God and His Word rather than in the shadow of the bad attitude coming from “downer” relatives). The other exception for someone leaving their family is when God calls someone away for His purpose, as God often does.

Also, the older generation has (generally) sought to abandon their own children by anxiously waiting for the day to kick them out of the family home and thereafter imagining that by committing such a sin God is somehow pleased (never-mind the fact when someone is given the boot that person ends up in one of four bad spots typically; 1) the military (I used to say this was the best of the four options as a veteran myself, however, it has gotten very bad (and dangerous) in the military and I cannot in good conscious recommend anyone join the military for the foreseeable future), 2) college (need I say more? Extreme debt and woke supremacy (see anti-Christ doctrine), no thank you!), 3) roommates (a place to contract horrible diseases, become an addict, or end up paying child support for years), or 4) homeless (this may be the best pick given the present nature of the other three options, I’m kidding - but I also wonder if I am kidding…). Later, as they’ve grown into their elder years, these same parents end up extremely lonely and could very likely end up in some awful and usually abusive places. My own grandfather was once robbed in his nursing home by another patient and quite possibly injected with a double-dose of a certain medication which ended his life. How sad to watch heathenism take the place of Christianity over and over again.

One thing a lot of people don’t know or appreciate is that the grandparents should be playing a much greater roll in your life and your children's lives.

"Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?"

Instead of the parents hiring baby sitters or a daycare (who can do great harm to your children without your knowledge but is, at the very least, doing harm in the unnatural separation of your children with a stranger) to look after your children, you should be leaving them in the care of your spouse or the children's grandparents. It is a full time job to manage a household (if it is done properly, I stress if). Many a stay-at-home spouse can become depressed and lazy. This is because that spouse lacks the daily act of stating their gratefulness to God (in fact, the source of all happiness is gratefulness; if you don't believe me, try it sometime). Simply list the things you are grateful to God for (out loud) over the course of 30 days every morning and see if it doesn't produce a certain measure of happiness in your life (by the way, you're not miserable because of your spouse, job (including being a homemaker), children, government, etc., it's always a lack of gratefulness). Start every day by saying "This is the day the Lord has made, I'll rejoice and be glad in it!" Let it be the first words out of your mouth and expound about every good thing you can think about (do you have a roof? running water? shoes? clothes? food?) Don't take anything for granted, that is a sure path to misery if ever there was one. Are you thankful for Christ above all? Thankful for those who love you? Say these things to God, it's essential to being happy, and I've found no other way to be happy despite working a wide array of jobs in my life.

We've accepted so many things which we ought not to have accepted. Homes should be a place of permanence, made of quality materials, self powering, whilst families should stay together for life. Taxes should only exist at the counter and on imports. Tiny Homes solve homelessness, incentivize land owners with tax breaks to allow such homes the use of land (or use public lands or marinas).

This is all common Christian sense.

Epilogue: A Final Word

This pamphlet starts with telling you who should be the head of the government (the Church) and ends by explaining how families should not abandon one another. A full picture!

Now, to return to how the government should be structured into the proper 3 branches:
1) The Anointed, (which is the Church and the head of government, the branches are not coequal)
2) the Appointed, and

3) the Elected.

The Anointed Branch of government is the Church, the Body of Christ, who should sit at the Crown or Head of the Government. Christ is the head of His Church, and the head of our nation would then formally be, as it ought to be, Christ (through His Body and Bride, the Church). In a nutshell, the Anointed Branch will have two components (hold onto your hats!). First, a King. That is probably the last thing this nation thinks it needs, however, it is really the most logical decision. We’ve heard of many corrupt crony politicians over the years; this will, frankly, never end. It’s simply too easy to bribe a local, state, or federal official. Foreign adversaries have corrupted much of the elected branch (such that all of it is, essentially, immobile and worthless to fix the present issues). Moreover, the Bible is stunningly clear that a King is a true and proper office, Christ himself being King of kings.

The second component would be a King’s Council which should be seven member council that will serve for one-year terms made up of totally randomly selected congregants from the Church. Which church you might ask? Well, basically any church that clings to the central tenants of Christianity and have not become apostate. The point is to find real Christians and simply randomly select them for this task (they don’t necessarily have to attend a “church” as the church is made of actual believers, meaning, those selected merely have to be believers).

The King would replace all the current President’s functions. However, the King would be a lifetime appointment without the right of successor-ship. The 7 person King’s Council would select the King and appoint him for life. What a job that will be! And how they do that I think should be up for them to decide. However, it should be unanimous, and if one needs to lock them in a room and give them no bread and water until they make a decision, so be it. The Church is meant to not just be the crowning head of governments, but the arbiter of nations. My point being that Christian Kingdoms should enter into compact to protect Christians and Christian lands. Such a body would replace the “Useless Nations”, otherwise called the U.N., NATO, etc., where extreme evil and corruption has languished for decades. It is strongly rumored that practically all muslim extremism and terrorism is being fully backed by the western powers in order to eradicate Christianity from the Earth. That means your tax dollars are being used to kill Christians throughout the Earth through the sword of muslims (that statement would strongly include and implicate our “only ally” in the middle east…).

"Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?"

The King's council will ratify or veto all legislation from the Elected Branch as well as ratify or veto all members nominated by the Elected branch into the Appointed branch. It is not three co-equal branches. The Anointed Branch has much more power than the other two, including the power to charge members of the government with High Crimes (such as election fraud as it is obviously required to maintain order). The King's Council can remove members from the elected branch at-will by a majority vote if there is suspicion of any corruption or immorality. A removal by the King's Council bars the member from ever serving again. They'll have original jurisdiction in charging all elected branch (or appointed) with crimes. I think an advisory council of legal experts should also be assigned to each member of the King's Counsel to assist in interpreting the law, but, ultimately, their decision is absolute and final, and they may hand out any punishment they deem fit. The only one who may "pardon" a wrongdoer is the King (again, just like the President).

This does not abolish any part of the government, but rather, adds a needed "Crown" to it.

Now, let me be clear yet again, I'm not calling for any sort of violent action (armed rebellion for instance) to bring about this radically different form of government. I believe the current satanist Freemason government is failing (and will likely continue to fail) under its own poor decisions (meaning sins) given enough time. However, maybe they'll simply repent! Maybe they'll willing come to this revelation and seek this manner of government of their own accord. Only God knows.

But the Church should prepare its heart and recognize that all modern civilization is actually built upon the foundation of the Church, and the entire Structure of Proper Society sits under the weight of God's people, and the true teaching of Our Lord Jesus Christ. No decent nation exists apart from God's Word.

I know, I know…many will say, "there are bad people inside the Church," or "we aren't ready," or "separation of Church and state," or some such silly excuse (as I understand it, the only place where the latter term is found is within the Constitution of the former Soviet Union). There are only excuses for shirking these duties, none of which are found in our Christian history whatsoever. Christian who aspire to leadership seek a noble calling according to the The Holy Bible, but there is quite a test, too!

I believe that the same measure of preparedness of the Church will equal the peace (or lack thereof) for our future (referring to the end of the "Freemason Dark Era” the world has endured). As prepared as the Church has made herself is the same measure that peace (or a lack thereof, meaning chaos) will reign. You’ll either suffer or excel, the choice is in your hands, and yours alone.

To those ministers who won’t advise their flocks of anything contained within this pamphlet, I would put this scenario to you:

When you stand before the Lord God Almighty on the Great and Terrible Day of Judgment, The Lord God Almighty is going to ask, “My Child, why did you allow the murder of the unborn, the wicked and detestable slave prison system, the extreme unfair weights and measures which I detest, and refused to answer the calling I placed on the Church and instead relied upon satanic occultists to lead my people instead by refusing to prepare your hearts for leadership?”

I imagine at this time many will have to reply (should it be a truthful reply), “We didn’t want to lose our tax exempt status and threaten our livelihoods.”

Please, at this time, fill in the blank with what you think God’s answer will be.

Moreover, I find there are two classic reasons why one won’t accept that which is so obviously true contained in this pamphlet.
1) “It ain’t me.” (meaning being murdered in the womb, violently abused in prison, etc.)
2) “I had to deal with it, so should you.” (meaning, “I’m angry and unforgiving toward those who abused me, and now I want to abuse you, too, and perpetuate the same cycle of sin; I’ve been converted to their evil ways and will not repent.”)

Both are equally short sighted, selfish, ridiculous arguments as to why evil should be permitted to reign in the land. If such wretched, hardhearted, unrepentant, unforgiving, selfish persons end up in heaven, would it still be heaven? Imagine things from God’s perspective for a minute and ask yourself, “What type of person would I want to spend an eternity with, exactly?”

We are accountable. Not just to one another as Christians, but to the Lord God Almighty, who gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever should believe on Him should not perish but have everlasting life.

And there isn’t one lying, greedy, lazy, apathetic, hypocrite walking the Holy Land of Heaven. There isn’t a single one who heard what was right, ignored it and so became a deceiver of first themselves, and then a deceiver of others (either by word or example before their fellow man) that is enjoying the Peace of Heaven. So, please understand I'm firmly of the opinion weak-kneed, wishy-washy, and shallow Christians are worse than worthless in the sight of heaven because the same power which raised the Lord Jesus Christ from the dead dwells in His people and that power is not meant only do ordinary acts of love and Charity; it is meant to set free captives, strike down giants, and deliver people from the fires of hell and death. God's Love and Power are for the mightiest miracles Earth will ever see. His power is displayed so the World knows there is a Holy God in Heaven who sees their sin and can save the sinner. If you aren't using all God has offered in his Word then you have absconded a pivotal duty for which you are greatly accountable as I understand The Holy Bible. It says in The Holy Bible those who follow God will have signs, wonders, and miracles follow them.

So, I have one question: Does God's miracle working power follow you as you walk in love?

If there is even a slight doubt in your heart that you don't walk out the fullness of your faith in God because you don't follow Him closely by loving the oppressed, needy, and weak then I think you may well be one who will hear, "Depart from me" and tossed into hell for an eternity by God. I only say this to you (and even to myself as I write this) because I love you. Isn't it terrifyingly interesting that Jesus said that many would come and say they had performed miracles, had cast out devils, healed the sick and then were told by Christ "depart from me, I never knew you." Note Christ didn't say they were lying. Did this happen because they sought miracles rather than doing things God's way (meaning stopping actual, tangible, injustices toward "the least of these"?)? Did they care not at all for those being led away to slaughter, being outrageously abused in prisons, those being stomped underfoot by lenders and liars, or some similar sins that will always exist in the absence of God's Word being practiced? Was it because they were fascinated with God's power, but didn't exercise His Love in a practical way?

We are accountable. It is just that simple. If Christ isn't your true all-in-all, then you need a miracle. This pamphlet describes how to help millions upon millions in our nation, and will save millions of lives (for instance, by stopping the genocide of abortion). If this doesn't interest you, I can't imagine how you know the heart of God at all. Charity is love in action. And it's the farthest thing from a dirty word to a sincere Christian. It was Charity, a life of Charity, that the King of Kings would descend and be born of The Blessed Virgin Mary, then spend His life serving helpless, mean, small-minded sinners exactly like you and I. Christ saw and knew that those who believed on Him, by the power of The Holy Spirit, might then be made into something of use to both Heaven and man.

We are accountable for not standing up for those who are truly being led off to slaughter, or oppressed and robbed, or otherwise mistreated. The scripture is crystal clear about this subject. If you hold your tongue and make no effort to learn the right way and speak up for it (as Esther was tempted), then it is just the same as if you did the evil yourself because you fund the government with your tax-dollars and condone sin with silence. I’ve heard a story that Abraham Lincoln used to watch slave boats get offloaded and would clench his hands so tight his fingernails pierced his hands. When you see evil practiced, do you feel the same way? You should! We should always make it clear that evil is evil.

If the Church won’t speak up for those being led off to slaughter and harmed, who will then? Who’s job is it, if not our own?

It is clearly our job and our job alone. If you don’t do it, no one will.

Two brief side-notes -

1) I believe we are called to build a new capital for our nation in the geographic center of our nation (Lebanon, Kansas) in the shape of a cross and depart from the pentagrams and heathenism of D.C.

2) Moreover, I think we should make Puerto Rico a state. A lot of great evils have been thrust upon that island by us, they were very prosperous before we took them over (contrary to the oftentimes racist (there is only one sentiant race on Earth, the human race) nonsense narrative they are merely a lazy island of welfare recipients). And a lot of things go on their because federal agencies and laws create a cavity for the decay of sin to gather, meaning, it’s left a territory because of a great number of illegitimate and illegal reasons. If you aren’t going to “marry” them to this country, let them go.

I believe we are, the Church, specifically called to prepare our hearts for leadership and to tuck the Word of God into our hearts so that we can be the hands of feet of Christ. The hands and feet of Christ healed, ministered, and tended to the flock. But they were also pierced in suffering and sorrow. We don’t talk much about the fact that following Christ requires you take up a cross, and sometimes that cross is very hard to bear (and yes, sometimes it is pure joy! You can be filled with joy even in some awful circumstances). Some Christians end up martyred for following God and doing only good things as Christ did. Don’t delude yourself into imagining leadership is anything other than a lot of trouble, trial, and suffering most of the time if you have the right heart about it. As selfish as you are is as “fun” leadership is to one, in my opinion. Inversely, a selfless person will have an equal measure of sheer difficulty as a leader. A selfless person pours themselves out for others. A selfish person is just stuffing themselves and is filled with every vanity, enjoys bossing others around, idolizes personal glory, and seeks the worthless praise of man rather than God’s approval. A selfish one is wasting their life and talent, the selfless will bear good fruit.

What causes you to care more for the needs of another rather than your own needs? It’s always love. Genuine love. Many pretend to have that love and pretend to act in your interest, but you know a tree by its fruit. And a Christian nation never has, nor ever will, rise through violence.

In the Words of the most excellent Monsignor Fulton Sheen, “God love you!”

Edition 3 Epilogue:

I felt led to join The Catholic Church a couple years after writing this pamphlet. A little under 2 months after I joined The Catholic Church the Federal Bureau of Investigation called my brand new Church a terrorist organization (from an FBI field office about an hour from where I live, no less). I think they did so because I’d written this pamphlet and were feeling incredibly insecure (see “quaking in their booties”) regarding its contents. Even a wide ranging campaign has been launched calling my governmental ideas “theocracy” and all manner of nonsense. An entire movie was made (which bombed spectacularly at the box office) to repel the ideas found in this manual (by attempting to make the idea of a Christian Kingdom seem ridiculous, never mind that such kingdoms were the cradle of Christendom for it’s entire life practically, and need to be revived to sustain such life). The Freemasons know all about the contents of this pamphlet, they simply keep it totally censored from the public (even on foreign websites run by other nations!). 1st Amendment indeed! Totalitarian regimes always promise the world and deliver trash, and when people can’t even speak their mind, perhaps that government should ask itself about what it is doing and why it is so incredibly insecure...I’ll give them “props” in that they didn’t foolishly say “it’s just some foolish German monk, whatever can he do to us!” (referring to the general papal response in Martin Luther’s time, who should be accounted a saint though he would hate such a designation I feel certain. He actually helped the Catholic church correct itself even if it did create the Protestant Reformation (which is just fine, too, btw)) This isn’t to say all that our government does is wrong, there is much that is right, this pamphlet isn’t written to point out that which doesn’t need fixed, rather that which does need (in my present opinion, as

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

I assure my thoughts change from time to time, why do you think there are 3 editions?) to be fixed.

Anyway, don’t think that you’re not being carefully watched by someone (even if its simply an AI bot) among the 16 “intelligence” agencies employed by the government. They are, generally speaking, using every form of espionage against the Christians of this nations, even throughout the Earth to try to kill, eradicate our influence, and destroy our culture so that paganism fills the Earth. I firmly believe most if not all “muslim terrorism” is fully sponsored by the Freemasons and our “only ally in the middle east”, and such organization are employed against Christian areas and nations to ruthlessly murder all Christians. Paganism will cause the Earth to be destroyed yet again, as in the days of Noah, if there is not a powerful change in direction back to Christ (this destruction by fire instead of flood I think). Make no mistake, “If my people, who are called by my name, will humble themselves and pray, seek my face, turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear their prayer from heaven and come and heal their land.” The ultimate “fault” in all this evil lies with, actually, just you and I.

It’s on us.

The Wages of Sin is Death – a Brief Sub-Article

The Deadly Sins can send a practitioner to hell. The wages of sin is death. That means the death of a person (even the second death into hell), an opportunity, or a relationship.

I believe these sins are all rooted in the practitioner not knowing they are “nothing.” Meaning, they are nothing apart and outside of Christ. We are blind, deaf, dumb, mute, incapable, unintelligible, buffoons of the highest magnitude. That is what we are when left alone. We are helpless sinners apart from Him. The only One who can touch our inner person is Our Creator God through the shed blood of His Son. In Christ, we become the righteousness of Christ by Faith alone. In Him, we live and move and have our being, we literally become “someone” and are brought alive only in Christ.

Knowing we are nothing apart from Him will defeat the Pride of thinking we are better than others (because we are nothing). Nor will we think we are less than others and have to “put on airs”. We’re all zeroes outside Christ. In Him, we can do all things but it is only because of Him. Therefore, we should only boast in Him.

"Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?"

Knowing we are nothing apart from Him will defeat Anger, because whatever was done to you unfairly is nothing compared to our sin against God. Our sin against God is 1000 fold worse than any others sin against us. It isn't wrong to be outraged at outrageous conduct (anger itself isn't a sin, but a passion), but that anger shouldn't lead to man's wrath. I've done worse toward God than man has me.

Knowing we are nothing apart from Him will defeat Greed, because if I know we are nothing we then should know we own nothing, neither money nor houses nor companies, rather we are the total and complete possession of God, and he has all authority and power over us and all others. I own nothing. Live a simple minimalist life, even if you have millions. Use your money to help the least of these, save your soul (widows, orphans, the homeless, foreigners among you, the elderly, the ill, prisoners, etc.). Truly, many a saint gave up all their inheritance and found true riches in Christ.

Knowing we are nothing apart from Him will defeat Gluttony, because a man who feels powerless (which is actually true apart from Christ) but fails to realize our All Good and Powerful Creator God has all authority and power will seek to exercise power over food and please his stomach to compensate for this insecurity when life is disappointing. Surrender to God. He knows and He is in charge. If you've been wronged, God will repay and is your vindicator.

Knowing we are nothing apart from Him defeats Vanity, because I know if I look like a homeless beggar, that is exactly what I truly am. And that is exactly what every single person on the Earth is, regardless of what they believe or how much they imagine they control or own. I'm a beggar, and if the fashion police still existed I should be arrested for dressing any other way. Quit competing.

Knowing we are nothing apart from Him defeats Lust (the basis of lust is control without commitment, meaning basically slavery), how can I imagine another person is an object that I may use and control when I am nothing who owns nothing (whether it be in the depths or our mind or worse)? I don't even own my own body, the slightest change at the smallest physical level can destroy me totally; ergo, how can I claim ownership over any person in any manner? Everything and Everyone belongs to Him, totally. And remember, you are only the "righteousness of Christ by faith", repeat this often if you fall into sin and fight against all temptation totally, you can prevail in Him! Most angry jaded jealous sexless older married hypocrites love going on about this sin and ignore the other 6, remember hypocrites, there is far more than "living in sin" by fornicating that tosses a man wholesale into hell!

“Superior Logic Speaks. Inferior Logic Censors.
Now, have I not commanded thee?”

Knowing I am nothing apart from Him and have nothing to barter to save my soul defeats Sloth, since I am eternally the willing bond-servant of God, how can’t I serve Him everyday? His salvation was free, He owns me, I belong to Him, He’s the only Owner; how can’t I want what He wants? How can’t His desire be my greatest desire, even my only desire, every single day? Who should I please if not God My Savior?

I’m sure many of the former thoughts on sin have probably been said somewhere else before, and many times over at that. Out of the heart flows an abundance. It is a generator. If our generator is kicking off poison, then we have a problem. If love and rivers of living water are pouring out of us, then we are a brand new creation and bearing good fruit in keeping with repentance! Amen! Let it ever be the latter for so long as we have to serve Him, for our days are numbered on Earth, let’s run the good race and fight the good fight while we still yet may!

Should the Church continue to allow itself to be forced from the political arena on threat of having its tax exempt status stripped by the United States Federal Government?

NO.

Clearly, in the Bible, time and again, God’s people (his Church) were involved in politics.

There is no greater arena in which to cry out on behalf of the “least of these”, as we are commanded to do by Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

And those who refuse to cry out, or who don’t care to risk running afoul of the United States Federal Government, please assign yourself a place with the sinners who will hear,

“Depart from me, I never knew you.”
